SUBJECT: High School Students Taking Continuing Education Courses

The new Career and College Promise legislation has created ambiguity regarding high school students taking continuing education courses, and several community college administrators have asked whether they may continue to enroll high school students in continuing education courses. The System Office is actively pursuing legislative clarification to address high school students' ability to take continuing education courses. Until this legislative clarification is received, community colleges may continue to offer continuing education courses to high school students. High school students must pay registration fees for continuing education courses, except for students who qualify for a public safety agency fee waiver as defined by G.S. 115D-5(b).
